WHAT THE APPLICATION DOES PROVIDE

- A digital companion workbook with guided journaling exercises based on published educational materials about chronic pain self-management.
- An AI-powered chat feature that provides educational responses based solely on the published book content. This feature explicitly instructs users to consult their healthcare providers and does not provide personalized medical advice.

- Self-tracking tools (symptom logs, medication lists, doctor visit notes) that allow users to organize and share their own health information with their healthcare providers. These tools do not analyze, interpret, or provide clinical meaning to the data entered.
- Emergency resource links directing users to professional crisis services.

IN-APP SAFEGUARDS

- A mandatory medical disclaimer is displayed on EVERY app launch, explicitly stating the app is NOT a medical device and does NOT provide medical advice.
- Users must acknowledge the disclaimer before accessing any app content.
- The AI chat feature includes persistent banners reminding users that responses are educational only, not medical advice.
- The AI chat system prompt explicitly prohibits the AI from providing diagnoses or prescribing medications.
- A self-compassion statement encourages users to approach their health journey with patience and to work alongside their medical providers.

REGULATORY CONCLUSION

Based on the above, "The Resilient Path" does not meet the definition of a medical device under FDA regulations, EU MDR 2017/745, or equivalent international frameworks. It is an educational wellness tool that explicitly directs users to seek professional medical guidance for all health decisions.

No regulatory clearance or approval is required for this application.
